

THE ELECTION

Is over, and we are beaten. Locofocoism is for a time triumphant in Maine, and that deadly influence is again over us. It becomes us as men, firm in the consciousness of a good cause as soldiers who have fought valiantly and strongly, with a verred arm and a bold heart for liberty and life, to pause and reflect—to stand beside our drooping standard and our broken arms and survey the field, and take lessons for the future, and learn wisdom from the past. It is in vain to say that defeat is as pleasant as victory, that the bacchanalian shouts and riotous rejoicings of our opponents are grateful to our ears, or that the defeated can feel for the moment the joyousness of triumph. But these mere personal matters of feeling or regret, these mortifications of our pride of party—natural and allowable as they are—fade into insignificance when contrasted with the great principles at stake, and the effect which this triumph of corruption and abuse may have upon the great questions now before the American public. We have been beaten, and we know it and feel it, and the thought is not pleasant, but unpleasant and provoking as it is, we would not exchange it, to join in the shout of triumph and the intoxicating revel of the victors, if we must also share the consciousness which the leaders of that party must feel, that it is a victory achieved by gross corruption, by the power of money, contributed by office holders and brought to bear directly and most powerfully upon the venal and the corrupt by bargain and sale, by illegal votes and double voting, by every species of misrepresentation and falsehood, by unscrupulous agents and bold and bad men, who would stoop at nothing to carry a point. We do not deny that the Whigs have exerted themselves—that against the power of money poured out like water, against the Army of government officers, against wickedness in high places and corruption in low—they have stood up like heroes, bold, undaunted and persevering, and have quit themselves like men in exertion and industry within the sacred lines of truth, fair dealing and candid reasoning. They have kept even sides with their opponents in the conflict, but, in the dark regions of bribery and corruption, in little arts and low intrigues, in innumerable tricks, in false representations, in direct bribery, and indirect courages they have refused to follow, and they have been beaten. And prouder, far prouder do we feel in the midst of our defeat, with such men, and such principles, and such a cause, than we even could feel in joining in any hoza, for a victory which we knew and felt to be the price of the sacrifice of all that is noble and elevating, and the result of unscrupulous effort and unprincipled management.

We deprecate the result we mourn over it. We hoped and we believed better things. We would not believe that the people of Maine, the intelligent, the reflecting, the candid and the honest, could be induced again to give their action to those principles and those men who have done so much to embarrass and to ruin us, that they would by a solemn and distinct vote give us their adhesion to the Sub-Treasury scheme, with all its abominations—to the union of the purse and sword to those measures by which we have so severely suffered and the avowed perseverance in which, gives such a gloomy aspect to the future. But so it is. Sad and sorrowful as is the thought, we are compelled to say and to admit, that Maine has distinctly given in her adhesion to the party in power, and that the Sub-Treasury scheme has been sanctioned by this people. Would that we could deny it. But the question was distinctly before the people and they have decided that the proposed scheme of collecting revenues in gold and silver, and establishing walking treasuries is wise and proper.

Believing as we do from our heart, that it is a weak and dangerous expedient, that it can never succeed, that the currency and business of the country must be deranged and embarrassed, and that the dark cloud must grow blacker and denser, and that corruption, venality and fraud must flourish under its operation, that labor must suffer and men be distressed—we can not but feel sad and mortified that Maine should add the weight of her name in favor of such a scheme.

We have done our duty. We have warned and we have entreated. We can now only join the great mass in bearing as we are able, the evils of these experiments and headstrong measures. We stand by our country and share her fate. We bow to the will of the majority.

To the Whigs we say WELL DONE be of good cheer stand to your arms all is not lost. We must keep the glorious flag of the Whigs flying, and rally under it, determined not to give up the ship. It is certain that this scheme—having met its doom—its destiny is fixed. Wait for the word from the Empire State and then, as we are sure that we are right, WE WILL GO AHEAD.

READ what the Hon GEORGE POINDEXTER, the late distinguished Senator from Mississippi, and one of the original supporters of Andrew Jackson, says of Mr Bond's Speech

The honest, but misguided and deceived people in every quarter of the Union, are grieved precisely just such a speech as Mr Bond has given, to rescue them from the darkness spread over their minds by artful demagogues, scoundrels and office holders. The facts rest upon record, and may be found among the achievements of the Government, none can wink so hard as not to see and understand them, and if there be an American citizen so bound in partisan chains as not to open his eyes to truths thus disclosed and established, such an one might well stand as a monument of blind infatuation produced on the human mind by the blighting influence of man worship.

I frankly own that for a season, I placed implicit reliance on the professions of the late Chief Magistrate made under his own sign manual. I entered the Senate of the Union with the fixed purpose of supporting the principles as the basis of his administration, but I soon discovered the discrepancy between these principles and the practice which marked the conduct of President Jackson. I witnessed all, or nearly all, which Mr Bond had said, and loving Rome better than Caesar, I clung to my country and denounced the usurper.

Many greater and better than myself fell into the same error and shared the same fortune. Believing, as I do, that the day of our deliverance from the iron grasp of executive power, unrestrained by constitutional limitations, and sustained by patronage and corruption, is at hand, I look with the most anxious solicitude and cheering hopes to the approaching elections, on the result of which hang the future destinies of the republic. Let the Whigs be true to themselves and the country, without regard to personal preferences, while divisions must ever bring defeat and discomfiture, and a glorious victory await us.

Wishing you gentlemen, a pleasant and agreeable festival I offered the subjoined sentiments to the company, and remain, with great respect and consideration

Your friend and fellow citizen
GEO POINDEXTER

DR. I. FRANCIS' OCULUS-AQUA.

OR Specific for Diseases of the Human Eye. In presenting to the afflicted Dr Francis related "Oculus Aqua" the Proprietor is conscientiously actuated by a sense of duty, and a feeling which tells him he will be the means of alleviating the sufferings of his fellow creatures.

This remedy is known—has been tried—and has succeeded, in cases where hope had fled, and where perpetual loss of vision was rapidly setting in. It has succeeded in cases where the Faculty of Medicine had declared the sufferer to be incurable. See Certificates.

The object of the Proprietor in thus openly and candidly placing his remedy before the community, is not only to be known to all, and that it may prove a balm of healing to the desponding and afflicted. Francis' Oculus Aqua is adapted to all inflammatory diseases of the Eyes, even when in their most tedious and chronic stages. It is adapted to all kinds of nervous affections, inability to use the eyelids, weakness of sight, ophthalmias &c. It will also remove, by a judicious course, those nebulous, scaly, dead, cloudy appearances frequently known by the name of "Cataracts"—Fungal, at those inflammatory and nervous diseases with which the organs of vision are attacked, should invariably be treated by this inestimable remedy.

The Specific is put up in bottles, with complete directions for use. Advice is cheerfully given free of charge, at the Proprietor's house, where also the Specific can be procured in the city of New York.

Professional hours from 7 to 11 A. M. and from 2 to 5 P. M. 10 Barkley Street June 12 1838

P S It has been thought advisable to annex a few certificates from Gentlemen, whose station in life respectsability, purity, and acknowledged worth are sufficient vouchers for the accuracy of their statements. To make any comments on them would be alike unbecoming to the judgment of the reader, and the unpublished honor of the authors.

From the Rev. Mr Davies, Pastor of the church at Bridgeville, N. Y. "This is to certify that a gentleman with whom I am acquainted, who had been nearly blind for eight years, after extending several hundred dollars on various remedies with a view to relieve himself, was at length prevailed on to try one bottle of Dr Francis' remedy. To the astonishment and gratification of his friends, and using it, though a martyr for many years to this distressing malady, he recovered his eye sight and speedily did he improve in health till he recovered his perfect vision."

Another case was that of a poor man who spent many months in the Eye Infirmary, was discharged by the physicians of the Institution, with what they termed an incurable cataract on one eye, so that he was nearly blind. A trial of Dr Francis' remedy, however, (three bottles only being used by him) removed it, to the surprise of all who knew him and now he can see with that eye as well as he ever did. I feel it my duty to give this information for the benefit of the public.

The Rev J Harrison, 41 Thompson street, having procured a bottle of the above for Mrs Harrison's eyes, says, "To his astonishment it has removed his dimness and pain which had been excessive for years; she had used many different eye waters but they all failed. Therefore I hope the public will appreciate its value."

JOSEPH HARRISON

Mrs McCaffrey, No 2 James street, widow of the late Dr McCaffrey, having used Dr Francis' eye water, says, "I am happy to state it has the desired effect, and I can truly say I saved me from
